

CHRIS OLIVER

Chris Oliver's design sensibility is in his genes – being the eldest son of an internationally-recognized interior designer. Toronto born and bred, and a mid-town resident from childhood, Chris attended Whitney Public School and Jarvis Collegiate Institute, before graduating from the Ontario College of Art (now OCADU) in 1983.

His focus, out of art school, was graphic design, which he practiced at several of the city's leading firms including Tudhope Associates and Forbes Design Group. Establishing Decisive Moment in 1990 allowed Chris to continue serving graphic clients while expanding the scope of his practice to include interior design. Today, he concentrates on his passion: transforming space by enhancing function, flow, and livability while delighting the eye with a modernist aesthetic and staying true to his client's vision.

Chris is the proud papa of a son and a daughter, and an active cyclist, swimmer, runner, kayaker, skater, and skier. His interests include photography, music, film, food, travel, and – especially – art.
